"Background to the Preliminary Mayan Etymological Dictionary: my life as a linguistic fieldworker in Meso-America" by Terrence Kaufman

The following narrative may be thought of as a sketch of the story of my life as a fieldworker in Meso-America, with the main focus being on Mayan. It does not include fieldwork in other parts of the world, or armchair work in other areas, not all of it linguistic.

Early in 1959, while a senior at the University of Chicago majoring in Linguistics, I worked during the Winter and Spring terms as a research assistant for Norman A. McQuown ("Mac"), doing cognate percentage counts on Swadesh lists collected in several Tzeltal- and Tzotzil-speaking towns as part of the "Chicago Project", a four-field anthropology project operating in highland Chiapas. In this cognate-counting, I worked with and at the direction of Yvonne Hajda, a graduate student who was working for Mac on the same data. Mac started working in Mexico in 1939 on Totonako, and produced a grammar of Coatepec Totonako as a doctoral dissertation at Yale in 1940. By 1959, McQuown had worked on several Mayan languages: extensively on Wasteko (Teenek) of San Lui*s Potosi*, Mam of San Juan Ostuncalco, Tzeltal of Oxchuc, less extensively on K'ichee7, Yukateko, and several others. Mac had inherited the Mayan materials gathered by Manuel J. Andrade in the 1930s while a professor at the University of Chicago. When he saw my interest in Mayan, at that time from a historicalcomparative point of view, Mac gave me access to his vast accumulation of Mayan descriptive materials to read and copy (by hand -- there were no photocopiers in those days) at will. Mac had also created a Mayan cognate file of some 300 items which I consulted at this time.

I received the AB in Linguistics and Germanic from the University of Chicago in June 1959. I studied Anthropology for one term as a graduate student at Chicago.

In 1960 I started doing research on Tzeltal and Tzotzil in Chiapas. I had arranged with Duane Metzger, a graduate student in Anthropology at Chicago, and Junior Fellow at Harvard, to do a project on language variation in Aguacatenango, a Tzeltal town of about 1200 speakers where Metzger had been doing social anthropological research for a couple of seasons. Evon Z. Vogt, Professor in the Department of Social Relations at Harvard, fronted as the PI for our project, and got us $10,000 from NSF, which lasted us more than a year. The project we carried out was to get a local assistant to interview people from as many households as possible by asking them to talk about the last time they had gotten sick, and tape-record the dialog. We got over 50 interviews of 10 to 20 pages each. The local assistant, Mariano Jua*rez Aquilar, a school-teacher from Aquacatenango, had been trained by Mac to write Tzeltal, so he was able to transcribe and translate into Spanish the interviews he had taped. Before going to the field, Metzger and I had arranged with the RAND Corporation of Santa Monica, California, who at the time were engaged in machine translation project (aimed primarily at Russian) under the direction of David Hays, to process our Tzeltal data and provide concordances, at no cost to us. In the field we transferred the Tzeltal text and Spanish translation to printed sheets with 80 columns (the number of columns in a computer punch card) and mailed them to RAND. At RAND the material was key-punched, and after we stopped sending them data, they provided a concordance in late 1962. This concordance served me in writing up the syntax section of my dissertation in 1963.

In 1960, I was in the field from March through September. In February, Metzger and I drove in his panel truck from Chicago to Santa Clara and Berkeley, California, then to Santa Monica, then to San Cristo*bal, Chiapas. We rented a nine-room house in San Cristo*bal for $30 a month, and processed the data from the Aquacatenango project there. I worked not only with Tzeltal of Aquacatenango, but also with Tzeltal of Tenejapa, and Tzotzil of Chamula, in the latter two cases training my informants to write their language, operate a tape recorder, transcribe texts in their language, and translate them into Spanish. These informants lived in the same house with us. In the same house lived Metzger's wife, Barbara, and their baby boy, John. Before long others began living in the house: John Hotchkiss, a Chicago graduate student doing social anthropology among ladinos in Teopisca; a writer friend of John's and mine named John Schulz; Harvey Sarles (and his wife), who worked both on Tzeltal of Oxchuc and Tzotzil of San Bartolo (the latter was the object of his 1965 University of Chicago dissertation). This house full of linguists, anthropologists, and Indians became known as "Casa Chicago", and was so called for several years after neither Metzger or I lived there any more, because other Chicago Project people took it over from us and kept living and working there.

During my first field season I learned many fascinating things about Mayan grammar, and recognized the characteristic Mayan categories of "positionals", "relational nouns", and "affect verbs".

When I left San Cristo*bal in September 1960 to start graduate school at Berkeley, I knew that my dissertation was going to be a descriptive grammar of Aguacatenango Tzeltal. That September, just before I left, McQuown sent two more recruits for linguistic work in Chiapas: Brent Berlin, who eventually worked on the semantics of Tenejapa Tzeltal numeral classifiers for his dissertation, and Nick Hopkins, who worked mainly on Tzotzil for some time. Brent and Nick had attended a Linguistics Institute at the University of Texas in the summer of 1960 and Mac had pointed them to Chiapas. Brent (and his wife and baby daughter) and Nick and others of the household remained when I left.

During the 1960-1961 academic year at Berkeley I worked as a research assistant for Kim Romney at Stanford, driving down there from Berkeley twice a week to work for a whole day each time. I lived on $150 a month.

In the 1960-1961 academic year I spent time both thinking about Mayan grammar and Mayan comparative phonology and vocabulary, and collecting cognate sets.

In the summer of 1961 I returned to San Cristo*bal for four months, this time in the employ of the Chicago Project, where I was commissioned to fill out dialect questionnaires for several speakers each from several Tzeltal towns. Other graduate students worked collecting comparable data from the other Tzeltal and Tzotzil towns. That summer Brent Berlin and Nick Hopkins were both there, and so was Mac for part of the summer. At the end of that season I read, collated, and analyzed all the Tzeltal questionnaires, while Nick Hopkins did the same for the Tzotzil questionnaires. I did more work on Aguacatenango Tzeltal, Tenejapa Tzeltal, Oxchuc Tzeltal, and Chamula Tzotzil. During that season I also did a monosyllabic root dictionary for Chamula Tzotzil, and Brent did one for Tenejapa Tzeltal. Harvey Sarles had done one for Oxchuc Tzeltal before summer 1961, and he also did one for San Bartolo Tzotzil.

[A few years before, Mac had worked out that since the vast majority of roots in Mayan languages are of the shape CV(H)C, where H is /7/, /h/, or /:/, is is possible to generate all possible monosyllabic roots and test for their presence in a Mayan language in a relatively short period of time. This procedure is exhaustive (for the phenomenon it is investigating), and collects a large amount of data, much of it not likely to be elicited in any other way. In all Mayan languages I have worked on, or have had others work on, a "monosyllable dictionary" has been collected. In work outside Mayan, "root dictionaries" have been elicited by me (or by linguists working under my supervision) for Mije-Sokean, Sapotekan,

Chochoan, Matlatzinkan, and Nawa, even when these root dictionaries are of both monosyllables and disyllables.]

Since September 1960 Nick had recruited and trained a second Chamula speaker, and by summer 1961 the two Chamulas had produced a couple hundred pages of transcribed and translated Tzotzil text. I set them to producing a lexical slip file from these texts, which they performed in fine fashion. Mac suggested that he and Brent could travel down to Huehuetenango in Guatemala and collect lexical data from some of the languages there if I would put together a questionnaire that would collect words that complemented the set of Mayan etymologies that I was assembling. So I put together a questionnaire of some 500 Spanish glosses, and Mac and Brent went to Huehuetenango and collected data from Chuj, Jakalteko (now known as Popti7), Akateko, and Q'anjob'al, which I then integrated into my cognate set collection. I also collected a vocabulary of 700 items plus paradigms from two teenage Ch'ol boys from Tila who were studying in boarding school in San Cristo*bal.

I also worked for Romney in the 1961-1962 academic year.

During this academic year, I searched through materials on Mayan languages that I could locate in the Berkeley library to augment my cognate set collection. Most of the new material was from earlier centuries.

In the summer of 1962 I spent only about three weeks in San Cristo*bal, collecting material I needed to round out the data for my descriptive grammar of Aguacatenango Tzeltal. I spent several hours collecting a vocabulary from a speaker of Amatenango Tzeltal who was in prison in San Cristo*bal. I did not go to the field again in Meso-America until summer 1967, except for a week in July 1965 when I worked on Tzotzil morphosyntax while I was otherwise being a tourist in Chiapas with my wife, Elaine Marlowe.

I spent about 6 weeks in Chicago the summer of 1962. Mac had gotten a grant from the Wenner-Gren Foundation to support me while I wrote up a paper presenting the reconstructed Mayan words I thought I could establish based on materials I had been able to examine; a fair proportion of the data came from Mac's or Andrade's materials that I had looked at as early as 1959. The resulting paper had some 500 reconstructed Mayan forms, not all of them going back to proto-Mayan. The theory of Mayan comparative phonology that I was operating with at the time had several deficiencies, although I had identified all, or virtually all, of the sound correspondences. This article, and a companion article by Mac (Kaufman 1964, McQuown 1964), were presented by Mac in a conference on Mayan prehistory hosted that fall by the Wenner-Gren Foundation in Burg Wartenstein, Austria, and was published (in Spanish) in 1964.

At this point I decided that I wanted to do a Mayan etymological dictionary. I assembled a questionnaire of 1435 lexical items and about 100 matters of structure -- phonological, morphological, and syntactic -- that I believed would yield a high proportion of cognate sets among the Mayan langages. This questionnaire I called The Mayan Vocabulary Survey, and it was mailed out for the first time in 1962, to linguists working in the field on Mayan languages, most of them members of SIL. The results of this mail survey were as follows:

Mopan San Lui*s: Matthew & Rosemary Ulrich 1962

During the 1962-1963 academic year I worked as a teaching assistant in the Linguistics Department of the University of California at Berkeley.

In Summer 1963 I wrote my dissertation, "Aguacatenango Tzeltal Grammar" on a typewriter. Actually, several chapters of my dissertation had been written as research papers or research reports earlier; only 30-40% of it was new in Summer 1963 [In the same summer I also wrote up "Mixe-Zoque Diachronic Studies" which I commissioned someone else to type up]. I did not go to the field.

In Fall 1963 I started teaching in the Linguistics Department of The Ohio State University.

[Winter 1964: Siuan]

In Summer 1964 I got married and attended the Linguistic Institute at Bloomington, Indiana. I did not go to the field.

In Fall 1964 I started teaching in the Linguistics Department of the University of California at Berkeley.

In Summer 1965 I traveled with my wife to Chiapas and visited the Lakantun jungle at Naja* with Trudi Blom. In San Cristo*bal I spent the first week of July working with Tzotzil speakers from Chamula (Juan Me*ndez Tzotzec) and Zinacanta*n (Domingo de la Torre Cruz) on sentence structure and inflexional morphology.

In Summer 1966 I traveled to Nigeria to accompany my wife who was starting field work on Ibibio, a Niger-Congo language. I read Shakespeare for two months and stayed in the shade.

In Summer 1967, I went to Chiapas to work on Mocho*, which I then knew as Motozintleco. I drove a station wagon that I had borrowed from the UC motor pool. In San Cristo*bal I came across Ray Freeze, a graduate student from the University of Texas who was there working on Lakantun of San Quinti*n, and we rented living and working space in the same building. He accompanied me to Motozintla, and we contracted with two speakers of Mocho* to work for me that summer, and we drove back to San Cristo*bal. I worked with the two speakers for 50 days. I collected a large vocabulary, including a monosyllable dictionary, and about 200 pages worth of transcribed texts. This was the first time I worked on a language with the aim of producing a dictionary. That summer, four friends of Ray's, one of them being Peter Keeler, came to visit him for a few days, and we decided to visit Chicomuselo to see if we could find any speakers of the probably dead Kabil, then known as Chicomuselteco. We spent five days at this and did not find any speakers.

In Dec 1967, at winter break, I went to work on Mocho* in Motozintla itself. Ray Freeze came down from Austin to help. I worked on the semantics of verbs and he worked on ethnobiology. In order to be able to help account for the results of linguistic borrowing, we decided to find out what the nearby Indian languages were in SE Chiapas, and recruited informants from nearby towns. In the process we discovered that in the neighboring town of Mazapa de Madero there was spoken a previously unknown Mayan language (most closely related to Mam) that was also spoken in Amatenango de la Frontera and in Tectita*n across the border in Guatemala.

This latter point was established by interviewing a woman living in Motozintla who had been born in Tectita*n. This "new" language I called Teko because that was how local people referred to it, although in Mazapa itself locals called it "Cakchiquel" because that was what an ignorant local Ladino schoolteacher had told the people there that its name was in Spanish.

After two weeks I went to Huixtla, Chiapas to work on Tuzanteco, the sister language of Mocho*. My wife came down to Chiapas, and she and I both collected data on Tuzanteco.

In Summer 1968 I worked for a few days in Motozintla collecting grammatical information about the derivational possibilities of verb roots, then spent about a month in Huistla and Tuzanta*n working on building up a lexical and text collection for Tuzanteco.

In 1968 I made a second mailing of the Mayan Vocabulary Survey. Results:

Chontal: Keller 1968

Chontal: Walker

Ch'ol Tumbala* & Tila: Viola Warkentin 1968

Ch'ol Tumbala*: Wilbur Aulie 1968

Northern Mam: Canger 1968, Sywulka 1968, Lansing 1968

Ixil Nebaj: Elliott 1968, Kaufman 1968

In August 1968 I drove from Berkeley to Provo, Utah, to interview a speaker of Mam from San Ildefonso Ixtahuaca*n who John Robertson was working with on the preparation of teaching materials. I collected the MVS and somewhat more. After that I drove to Irvine to visit with Nick and Lore Colby, who had brought 5 Ixil speakers from Nebaj to build an Ixil house as a way of training anthropology students in ethnology; Duane Metzger had brought 3 Yukateko speakers from Ticul to build a Yukateko house. I worked with three of the Ixil speakers and one Yukateko speaker, and collected the MVS, and in the case of Ixil, much more than that. I trained a 16-year old Ixil boy (Xhas Sijom, Jacinto de Paz Pe*rez) to write Ixil, and in Winter 1969 I took him to Berkeley for a couple weeks to do more work on the language. Not long after that I began paying his room, board, and tuition at a private secondary school in Chichicastenango, and eventually Jacinto was mayor of Nebaj.

Since I had no results of the MVS for Wasteko, Lakantun, Itzaj, Ch'orti7, Tojolab'al, Q'anjob'al, Southern Mam, or Pogomaam, I decided in 1969 that I would have to collect such material myself, or commission someone to do it. This began a period 10 years of work on documenting as many as possible of the Mayan languages, in the process establishing a research and training program that not only created large lexical databases of 19 dialects of 12 Mayan languages, but also trained more than 60 Guatemalan Mayan speakers to do linguistics, and provided several graduate students with dissertation topics in linguistics. The research program and infrastructure of the Proyecto Lingu"i*stico "Francisco Marroqui*n" was created in 1970 by me, Bob Gersony, Jo Froman, and David Drake. My trips for work in Guatemala ran from Dec 1969 to Aug 1979.

1968: sent Sarah Wehhausen to work on Tojolab'al

Summer 1969: sent Una Canger to work on Lakantun and Teko

In Summer 1969 I started working on Wasteko. I drove from Berkeley to Austin (for my first visit there) to meet up with Nick Hopkins and Kathryn (then known as Judy) Josserand, and we drove to Tamazunchale in two cars. We set up in a motel on the edge of town and found speakers in Tancanhuitz /tam k'aan=witx/, San Lui*s Potosi* (Potosino or Western Wasteko [A*ngel Robles Salazar]) and Tantoyuca /tam toyok/, Veracruz (Central Wasteko [Manuel Silverio]) to work with. Nick and Kathryn left after two weeks, and (after training the Potosino speaker to write Wasteko) I worked with both speakers (separately) after that for 6 weeks. I collected a monosyllable dictionary from the Tantoyuca speaker directly, and trained the Potosino speaker to do it on his own. During one week I worked with a Nawatl speaker from the community of Cuatlamaya*n, part of Tancanhuitz. This was my first field work on a non-Mayan language.

At Christmas break 1969, Aquiles Palomino (then a graduate student at UC Irvine) and I traveled to Ixil country in Guatemala to recruit speakers from Chajul and Cotzal who would come to Irvine in the summer of 1970 to work with me on an Ixil dictionary. Aquiles was also scoping out Chajul as a place to do doctoral research in social-cultural anthropology.

During June and July of 1970 I worked at Irvine on a pan-dialectal dictionary of Ixil, working with three speakers at a time. The data collected was immediately keypunched, yielding a 7500-item lexical database.

In August 1970 I traveled to Antigua, Guatemala to spend a year collecting lexical and grammatical data on Mayan languages of Guatemala. Before heading for Guatemala, on the advice of my former student, Una Canger, who had done doctoral research on Northern Mam of Todos Santos, I contacted two priests whom she had met in Guatemala who were interested in doing research on Mayan languages of Guatemala, and had arranged to have their parent organizations, the Maryknoll Fathers (Donald Lansing) and the Oklahoma Diocese (Padre Ramo*n), fund them to set up a center for this research in Antiqua. They had named themselves Proyecto Lingu"i*stico "Francisco Marroqui*n" (PLFM), after the first bishop of Guatemala, who was said to be a friend of the Indians. They invited me to live and work in their center and said I could arrange to have speakers brought there for interviewing. I decided to try out this arrangement, and it turned out to be quite convenient and effective. The administrator of the PLFM, Bob Gersony, was a Vietnam veteran who had decided he didn't want to live in the US, and had arrived in Antiqua several months earlier, hired a local tenager to tutor him in Spanish, and found a place at the PLFM because of his organizational skills. Gersony met me at the Guatemala City airport with a jeep and took me to the PLFM in Antiqua, where I stayed until July of 1971.

Between August 1970 and July 1971 much changed at the PLFM. The PLFM's mandate up till the time I arrived was to train Maryknoll priests arriving in Guatemala in whatever Indian language was spoken in the parish to which they had been assigned. At Gersony's urging, the PLFM also began training in the local languages Peace Corps volunteers (PCVs) who were going into Indian villages, and charging a fee. Some of the Peace Corps volunteers asked to the assigned to the PLFM, and between 1970 and 1971 three of them worked at the PLFM; only one of them stayed on more than a year. By November, several Indians had been brought in to help train priests or PCVs, and many of them seemed to be quite interested in their own languages. Gersony and I started thinking about the possibility of training Indians to do linguistic research. I mentioned that I had always taught my informants to read and write their own languages, if they were of the right age. I also had with me a copy of Ken Hale's article "American Indians in Linguistics". With the collaboration of PCVs Jo Froman and David Drake, we worked out a plan for the PLFM that would transform its functions. We arranged with the Peace Corps to recruit advanced graduate students in linguistics and assign them to the PLFM to oversee the linguistic training of teams of Indians and their collecton of lexical and text data. The PLFM carried out dialect surveys of Kaqchikel, K'ichee7, Mam, Q'anjob'al, and Pogom to determine the number of dialects in each and decide from which dialects we would train speakers in linguistics and do dictionaries and literacy materials. By mid 1971 we were ready to recruit graduate linguists to oversee training. We recruited Will Norman, who oversaw K'ichee7 and Kagchikel speakers, and Nora England, who oversaw two teams of Mam speakers. To fund the research of the PLFM we set up a Spanish school to teach Spanish one-on-one to PCVs, British Volunteers, Canadian Volunteers, and any tourists that were in Antigua and wanted our services. A British Volunteer, Tony Jackson, became director of the Spanish school, and he later became administrative director of the PLFM for two years. The PLFM was incorporated as a non-profit research institution, and all administrators, linguists, and trainees were voting members. In 1976 the PLFM's administration passed into the hands of Indians that had been trained by the Project.

In working out the future research program of the PLFM, of which I was director from 1970 through 1979, I worked out for the Mayan languages of Guatemala a Spanish-based but linguistically accurate, consistent, and uniform orthography (Kaufman 1976). This orthography conflicted in several ways with the orthography(ies) devised (in some cases as early as 1949) and promoted by the SIL, which I found to be deficient in various ways. The PLFM orthography, as it was known, was a source of considerable annoyance to some elements in SIL, who worked hard to discredit it.

Along with all this work, between Aug 1970 and Jul 1971, doing what I had in the first place come to do, I elicited upwards of 2500 words from each of the languages listed below:

In the course of the Guatemalan dialect survey, the following new knowledge was uncovered:

March 1971: SAKAPULTEKO. Discovered in the course of doing a systematic survey of towns in the traditional K'iche7-speaking area of Guatemala. Has 2 varieties. Closely related to K'iche7 and Tz'utujiil. (See Kaufman 1976d).

May 1971: SIPAKAPENYO (my label; supplanted by SIPAKAPENSE). Discovered in the course of doing a systematic survey of towns in the traditional Mamspeaking area of Guatemala. Number of dialects not established. (See Kaufman 1976d).

The survey of Q'anjob'al and Popti7 revealed that the speech of San Miguel Acata*n and Rafael La Independencia were not Q'anjob'al in the sense of Santa Eulalia, Barillas, and Soloma, but intermediate between these and Popti7. I labelled this form of speech "Akateko". All three are mutually intelligible (or not) to the same degree. Terminologically, one should recognize a single language with three dialect areas, or three languages, but not two languages Q'anjob'al and Popti7. The current practice is to refer to Q'anjob'al, Akateko, and Popti7, though this is considered by some to be politically incorrect because of the fact that Akateko was known traditionally as Q'anjob'al and is mutually intelligible with it; however, Akateko is also mutually intelligible with Popti7, so we could call all three Q'anjob'al; that would surely be considered politically incorrect by speakers of Popti7.

In 1972, the two priests who had started the PLFM in 1968 became disaffected with the new direction that had been taken by the PLFM and withdrew from the Project. Bob Gersony became administrative director until replaced by Tony Jackson in 1974.

Between 1971 and 1978 my work on Mayan languages in Guatemala was directed to supporting the work of the PLFM. I worked on their dictionaries with the teams for K'ichee7 of Santa Catarina Ixtahuaca*n and Nahuala* /nawala7/, Kaqchikel of Tecpa*n, Kaqchikel of Comalapa, and Mam of Ostuncalco.

In 1971, 1973, 1974, 1978, and 1979 I worked on Xinka, a small language group with three (at the time) surviving moribund languages. Lyle Campbell started this work; he had come in Guatemala in 1971, and started working with speakers from Chiquimulilla and Guazacapa*n. He brought some of them to Antigua so that we could work on Xinka together. We worked together again in 1973 and 1974. In the latter season we worked with speakers from Jumaytepeque. After 1974 Campbell did not continue with Xinka, but I returned to it in 1978 and 1979.

In the late Summer of 1979 I spent a week each collecting data on Tlaxcala Nawa (in Tlaxcala), Orizaba Nawa of Santa Mari*a Izhuata*n (in Forti*n), and Matlatzinka (in Me*xico City).

In 1979 Will Norman was in Pittsburgh for a term as a visiting professor and we collaborated on writing a comparative Ch'olan phonology, grammar, and lexicon (Kaufman and Norman 1984).

I began working on Mayan comparative grammar, discussing many details with Will Norman.

In Summer 1979, I saw that work in Guatemala was not going to be possible for a while, so in 1980 I decided to return to working in Mexico, on Wasteko. I collected data for a dictionary of Western Wasteko of Tancanhuitz and for another dictionary of Central Wasteko of Tantoyuca; each dictionary eventually topped 10,000 items in extent. I worked on Wasteko from 1980 to 1990, but no field trips were made in 1985, 1988, or 1989. I also worked on Huasteca Nawa in 1984, 1986, 1987, 1990, and created a slip file that when databased in 1999-2000 had 12,000 entries. The databases for these two languages were the first really large lexical databases that I created.

My primary work in the Huasteca was on Wasteko: I worked on Potosino Wasteko of Tancanhuitz in the summers of 1969, 1980, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1986, 1987, and 1990; I worked on Central Wasteko of Tantoyuca in the summers of 1969, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, and 1984.

Huasteca Nawa is spoken in several dialects, whose actual number cannot be known without a dialect survey being conducted; we can at least recognize "western" (San Lui*s Potosi*), "central" (Hidalgo), and "eastern" (Veracruz) types. I worked for a total of 13 weeks in the summers of 1969, 1984, 1986, 1987, and 1990 on western Huasteca Nawa (of Cuatlamaya*n, Tuzantla, Tampamolo*n, and Coxcatla*n); I worked for a total of 4 weeks in the summers of 1984 and 1986 on eastern Huasteca Nawa (of Los Ajos, Chicontepec, and Chontla).

On several occasions during the 1980s I took graduate and undergraduate students with me to the Huasteca who worked on Wasteko ethnobiology and grammar, and on Huasteca Nawa vocabulary and texts.

In 1981 I started working with an 18 year old Wasteko young man from Tancanhuitz, Benigno Robles Reyes, who proved to have outstanding abilities as a speaker and as a student of language. He learned to write Wasteko before I started to teach him, by watching me write it. In 1983 I began a dialect survey of the 18 Wasteko towns, and he traveled to all of them and brought me speakers to interview. After I had processed the 18 dialect surveys (of 1200 lexemes and 200 points of grammar), I created a shorter questionnaire (of ca 500 entries) and sent BRR to complete the questionaire with two new people in each of the 18 towns. He carried out this task commendably, in 1984, 1986, and 1987. In 1985 I sent BRR to Guatemala for several months to study linguistics with Nora England at the reconstituted PLFM.

In 1984, the Ministry of Education of Guatemala held the Second National Congress on Linguistics (the first had been held in 1949), focusing on indigenous Guatemalan languages. At this meeting a study group on proposed orthographies for Guatemalan languages was formed.

In 1985 I bought an Osborne desktop/portable computer. For 22 years I had had to depend on someone else to type up my handwritten manuscripts, introducing countless errors. Henceforth all errors were committed by me, but there weren't as many of them.

In 1985 Brent Berlin and I began the South American Indian Languages Documentation Project (SAILDP). This project, funded for two years by both NSF and NEH, had as its goal the creation of lexical (ca. 1800 items) and grammatical databases for as many South American languages as the data could be gathered for from from published and manuscript sources. During the two years it was funded, lexical databases for 40 languages of Western Amazonia were created. One grammatical database was created, which took a solid month of a post-doctoral research assistant's time. The project was not refunded after two years, and Berlin and I found other things to do than submitting revised grant proposals -- though a year later we were asked by NEH why we had not resubmitted.

In 1987 the study group on proposed orthographies for Guatemalan languages, made up of Indians who had received linguistic training, most of them through the PLFM, met amd deliberated, and then recommended to the government of Guatemala that an orthography be adopted which was essentially identical with that proposed by the PLFM in 1970. The Congress and the President of Guatemala ratified this recommendation and, officially at least, the orthography wars were over. At this point, though recent SIL workers in Guatemala accepted the now official orthography, some old hands never accepted it.

My son Bennet was born 8-8-88. In 1988 and 1989 I did not go to the field, but worked on Mayan comparative grammar.

During the 1980s, outside the field I carried out, I worked on Yuta-Nawan comparative phonology
Oto-Mangean comparative phonology and grammar
Hokan comparative phonology and grammar
Mayan comparative grammar

In March 1991, I started working on Meso-American epigraphy with John Justeson, first on Epi-Olmec inscriptions, which we were able to decipher as being written in an ancestor of the Sokean languages. This was followed by research on Sapoteko writing, on which we were able to achieve initial results as early as February 1992. This ultimately led us to propose research aimed at documenting those Mije-Sokean and Sapotekan languages necessary for reconstructing the ancestor for each family, so that the linguistic details in play at the times the writing systems were in use could be most reliably and more amply projected, thereby aiding decipherment. This research began in 1993, with support from the National Geographic Society on the documentation of Soteapan Gulf Sokean, an underdescribed and in many respects very conservative Sokean language. This was followed up in 1994 by work on the six Mije-Sokean languages that I deemed most helpful for comparative purposes, supported jointly by the National Science Foundation and the National Geographic Society. Starting in 1995, we expanded to cover all of the Mije-Sokean languages, plus 11 Sapotekan languages whose documentation I consider sufficient to serve as a basis for reconstructing proto-Sapotekan. Starting in 1997, we added both Matlatzinkan languages, selected Totonakan languages, selected forms of Nawa, and one conservative Chochoan language, to contribute to the historical linguistic base for understanding the culture history of central Mexico. Over the years, this research has been supported by the National Science Foundation (1995-2001), the National Geographic Society (1997-2000), and the Salus Mundi Foundation (2001-2004).

The research project is now named The Project for the Documentation of the Languages of Meso-America (PDLMA). The languages currently selected for investigation are those of peoples whose ancestors probably practiced writing or produced narrative pictography (Mistekan has been excluded). Every summer beginning 1994 between 7 and 15 linguists have worked together for nine weeks in a research center with speakers of as many different languages. BRR is the person entrusted with traveling to the towns where the Project seeks speakers: he interviews people, collects data, and contracts with speakers to work for 9 weeks in the summer at the PDLMA's research center. The linguists have come from all over North America, Meso-America, and Europe: while most have been graduate students, some have been PhDs, and some have been undergraduates. After 1996 Matlatzinkan, Nawa, Totonakan, and one Chochoan language have been added to the list of languages to be documented. From 1993 through 2002, no Mayan languages were the focus of the PDLMA; as of 2003, the PDLMA started working on the documentation of Lakantun and Yokot'an.

In 1994 I started using Gateway notebook computers.

From 1993 through 2003 I worked on the following non-Mayan languages: (for each a lexical database exists)

In retrospect, from the vantage of 2003, I want to bear witness to the value of collaborative research both with linguists and cultural anthropologists. I started out in 1960 collaborating with Duane Metzger on Tzeltal. I lived with field linguists in Chiapas in 1960 and 1961. In 1967 I collaborated with Ray Freeze on Mocho*. From 1968 to 1970 I collaborated with Nick and Lore Colby on Ixil. From 1970 to 1979 I collaborated with linguists and administrators of the PLFM. In 1971 and 1973-1974 I collaborated with Lyle Campbell on Xinka. I spent 2-4 months every year in Guatemala from 1970 to 1979, living with field linguists. In 1985-1986 I collaborated with Brent Berlin on the SAILDP. From 1991 through to the present I have collaborated with John Justeson on decipherment. Since 1993 I have collaborated with linguists in the PDLMA, especially John Justeson, Roberto Zavala, and Thom Smith-Stark. I have coauthored articles and books with Lyle Campbell, Will Norman, John Justeson, Sally Thomason, and Victor Golla. The rest of the time I have worked and written on my own. Both styles are rewarding, but the rewards of collaborative research are very great: more is produced than would be produced individually, and dialog among colleagues committed to the same research program helps prevents incompletely developed ideas from being presented as one's mature thinking on important topics.

INTRODUCTION TO "A PRELIMINARY MAYAN ETYMOLOGICAL DICTIONARY"

Terrence Kaufman (TK) and John Justeson (JJ)

This database/textfile is based on the following:

TK 1959-1978: Mayan etymologies, ca 1100 entries

TK 1978, "The current state of Mayan comparative phonology"

TK & William M Norman 1978, "An outline of proto-Cholan phonology, morphology, and vocabulary"

OKMA 1994-2002, Guatemala Mayan synonym database, ca 1500 items (based on TK's Mayan Vocabulary Survey)

TK 1967-1968 Mocho* lexical database (ca 5800 items)

TK 1967-1968 Tuzanteco lexical database (ca 4700 items)

TK 1971 Q'eqchi7 lexical database for Cahabo*n and Lanqui*n (ca. 2400 items)

In a future version of this file, the following available sources will be incorporated:

TK 1969, "Teco: A new Mayan language"

TK 1972, El proto-tzeltal-tzotzil

Robert M Laughlin 199x, The Flowering of Man

Besides incorporating the above, a future version of the MED database will incorporate relevant material from all the field data on Mayan languages collected by Kaufman, most notably Chamula Tzotzil [1960-1965], Mazapa Teko [1967-1969] (here data was also collected by Una Canger), Ixil (all three dialects) [1968-1970], Tancanhuitz Potosino/Western Wasteko [1969,1980-1990], and Tantoyuca Central Wasteko [1969, 1980-1984].

From Spring 2002 through Spring 2003, funding from FAMSI and from the Salus Mundi Foundation supported the databasing of TK's data on a variety of Mayan languages, with the purpose of using it to create a preliminary version of a Mayan Etymological Dictionary.

Characterization of the data

Mayan Etymologies: cognate sets assembled by TK, 1960-1971; a few new etymologies by Will Norman, 1971-1979.

Mayan Etymologies. This collection of etymologies was assembled between 1959 and 1970 by TK.

Tuzanteco: data collected by TK in Dec-Jan 1967-8 and Sum 1968. Keyboarded by Joanne Michel in 2002.

Chuj of San Sebastia*n Coata*n [PLFM]: data collected under the direction of TK and Judith Maxwell 1973-1975; keypunched; printed out in 1984; published in 1998. Keyboarded by Karina Koppius in 2002.

Poqomchi7 of Santa Cruz Quiche* [PLFM]: data collected under the direction of TK and Linda Brown 1973-1975; keypunched; printed out in 1984 [incomplete: ends at <tol..>]; unpublished. Keyboarded by Mariana Espinosa in 2002.

K'iche7 of Nawala7 [PLFM]: data collected under the direction of TK and William M. Norman 1971-1975; keypunched; printed out in 1984; published in 1996. Keyboarded by Marysaura Ortiz in summer 2002 from the printout of 1984.

Kaqchikel of Tecpa*n [PLFM]; data collected under the direction of TK and William M. Norman 1971-1975; keypunched; printed out in 1978; published in 1996. Keyboarded by Mariana Espinosa in summer 2002 from the printout of 1978.

Kaqchikel of Comalapa [PLFM]; data collected under the direction of TK and William M. Norman 1971-1975; keypunched; printed out in 1978; published in 1996. Keyboarded by Karina Koppius in 2002 from the printout of 1978.

Ixil of Nebaj, Cotzal, and Chajul: data collected by TK 1968-1970; keypunched; printed out. Partly keyboarded by Bennet Kaufman in summer 2002 from a printout of the database of 1970 (the original computer tape is unreadable). Most of the remainder of the printout was keyboarded in summer 2003 by Mariana Espinosa, not charged to FAMSI. Parts of one letter remain to be databased.

Q'eqchi7 of Cahabo*n and Lanqui*n: data collected by TK in 1971. Keyboarded from TK's field notes. Keyboarded Nov 2001 - March 2002 by Charlotte Devensky.

Tz'utujiil of San Pedro La Laguna: data collected by TK in 1970.

Keyboarded by Charlotte Devensky and Sarah Justeson from TK's field notes.

Mocho*: data collected by TK in Sum 1967, Dec-Jan 1967-8 and Sum 1968. Keyboarded by David Mora-Marin during Fall 2000 (not charged to FAMSI), and completed by Joanne Michel in 2002[??], from preliminary dictionary, field notes, and slip files, all by TK.

Mopan of San Lui*s: data collected by TK in 1970. Keyboarded from TK's field notes by Mark Ferguson.

Ch'orti7 of Jocota*n: data collected by TK in 1970. Keyboarded from TK's field notes by Mark Ferguson.

Tzotzil of San Bartolome*: data collected by Harvey Sarles 1960-1962, and included in his unpublished 1965 University of Chicago dissertation. Keyboarded by Mark Ferguson.

other Mayan material that has been databased, not covered by FAMSI Uspanteko: data collected by TK in 1971. Keyboarded by Theresa Stark from TK's field notes. Uncompensated.

OKMA comparative vocabulary of Mayan languages of Guatemala. ca 1500 items, based on a questionnaire roughly like the MVS. The data is of high quality, being collected by OKMA linguists, but there are some failures to consistently mark vowel length for some of the languages. There are also very occasional errors with regard to glottalization of consonants, and the presence of non-initial glottal stop. In accordance with the practice of the official orthography for the Mayan languages of Guatemala, glottal stop in absolute word-initial position is not spelled. While not contrastive for Greater K'iche'an languages, it is contrastive for all other Mayan languages, including Q'eqchi7, and should be written. The data from this database are cited when they help to establish new cognate sets or expand preexisting cognate sets. In updated versions of the "Preliminary Mayan Etymological Dictionary", OKMA material will be supplemented by or replaced by data collected by TK or found in PLFM dictionaries.

XXXXX

JJ helped in the editing and formatting of this material, as follows:

A program was written to format data from the initial comparative database of 1103 items so that each data type began in a standard position in the line (except when the length of the data of a give type precluded this). JJ inserted into this file the data from OKMA, which however was differently formatted. JJ preprocessed the entire data file in an ASCII editor, then wrote a set of programs to revise the entirety into a consistent format. That format is: lexical item; grammatical code; gloss; data source. Because the data in some entries occupies so much space, clarity of presentation has led us to present the data in landscape format.

During the spring 2003 semester, JJ wrote a set of programs to mine the data in the project's databases for inclusion to add to the existing cognate sets. For each language, the sound changes linking it to proto-Mayan were used to specify all of the CV(X)(V1)C syllable shapes in the modern language that descend from a particular CV(X)(V1)C in proto-Mayan. In effect, each of these sequences was treated as matching based on the CVC skeleton -- that is, agreement of the syllable nucleus with the expected shape was not imposed -- in order to avoid missing data that was aberrant or incorrectly represented. Affixes were stripped off, so that only syllables in forms spelled as roots were compared. Agreement with the position of the CVC sequence in the root was also not imposed, in order to catch data that was not analyzed or was misanalyzed morphologically. For each lexical item in a database that phonologically "matched" a proto-form already in the list of etymologies, the data for that item was formatted and inserted into the list of etymologies. Finally, the etymological list was reordered so that the data from each language appeared in its prescribed position.

The processing stages involved are conceptually easy. However, the process of arriving at a joint understanding of what was required, together with the process of debugging the unwieldy programs that were being produced, led the programming process to take several weeks of debugging, rewriting, and fine-tuning. The programs were not "perfected" until June of 2003, when the PDLMA's field season was underway.

Intentionally, the matching algorithm massively overgenerates on the principle that it is better to cull a great deal of irrelevant data than to miss any relevant data. In the case of Q'eqchi', for example, the programs added more than 11,000 lines of data, of which JJ eliminated all but 1450 as not being real matches. Between the end of the PDLMA's 2003 summer field work and the submission of this report, there was only time to edit the 1,000-page etymology file twice. As a result, the only data comprehensively mined in this way are from the Mocho* database, whose data was introduced and edited before the field season started, and the from Q'eqchi7 and Tuzanteco databases. Data from these three languages had the highest priority for inclusion because they best preserve features indicating the nature of the syllable nucleus. A small proportion of the relevant Mocho* data is probably missing, because this data was introduced before the processing procedures were perfected (it was however supplemented by Kaufman looking up Mocho* data for many sets).

XXXXX

The etymologies found herein are from the union of four sources: "Mayan Etymologies", TK 1959-1978; "The current state of Mayan comparative phonology", TK 1978; "An outline of proto-Cholan phonology, morphology, and vocabulary", TK & WN 1984; "Guatemala Mayan synonym database", OKMA 1990-2001. In the case of the last source, first TK identified cognate sets, then TK merged them with existing etymologies or TK recognized new etymologies. The total number of resulting etymologies was about 3000.

Lexical databases for Mocho* [5900 items], Tuzanteco [4600 items], and Q'eqchi7 [2400 items] were searched for matches for the existing previously established etymologies.

The above-mentioned databases, as well as all the other data TK has on hand, databased or otherwise, have not yet been compared with each other for the purpose of recognizing and establishing additional etymologies: this will be a later step in this research.

These etymologies are ordered by semantic field. Etymologies of the same gloss are adjacent to one another. Etymologies of related meaning are in the neighborhood of each other. The semantic fields are ordered more or less logically. Within each semantic field the etymologies should be ordered logically, but this has not been done yet. Each etymology should be provided with a semantic reconstruction glossed in both Spanish and English, but for the moment, in most cases, the user will have to devise his/her own proto-gloss from the attested glosses in the individual languages. Each reconstruction has a label indicating how far back in the Mayan family tree the item can be reconstructed for. When two or more sets have the same reconstructed gloss, usually none of the etymologies covers the whole family. In such cases it is often possible to argue that all but one (or even all) of the etymologies is a post-proto-Mayan innovation. When the rest of the data that TK have on hand is databased and edited, the new data will be integrated into the Mayan Etymological file, and phonological and semantic reconstructions will be modified as needed, and assignments of reconstructions to subgroups also modified as needed. This second stage is in progress.

XXXXX

The OKMA data. The data for verbs was generally collected via Spanish in the third person singular of the preterit (corresponding to the Mayan completive aspect). They are glossed accordingly. When the MED database is revised, the inflexional affixes will be removed from the verbs and the glosses replaced by Spanish infinitives. In many cases the OKMA data will be supplemented or in some cases supplanted by data collected by TK or found in available documentation. Though the OKMA data was collected by Mayan-speaking linguists, there are occasional lapses in the recording of vowel length, and of course, occasional typos. The Mayan linguists were not always collecting data from languages they spoke.

XXXXX

Orthography.

All Mayan forms collected by linguists are cited according to the orthographic principles and practices developed in 1970-1971 at the PLFM. This orthography was modified in the official Guatemalan orthography by replacing <7> (glottal stop) by <'>. This revision has not been adopted in the present materials, since it masks the difference between glottal stop and glottalization of a consonant.

Some forms are cited from colonial period sources. When the phonology can be established except for vowel length, accent, and glottal stop, the forms are respelled with PFLM symbols but preceded by #. Where this is not possible, the forms are enclosed in angle brackets, thus <abc>. Forms cited from Epigraphic Mayan are cited in angle brackets, with signs in the script separated by hyphens, thus <ba-la-ma>.

XXXXX

Initial glottal stop. All GK languages except QEQ lack initial glottal stop. But the glottal stop appears when an unpossessed noun is not initial in a compound, as 7aj=7iitz, yaj=7anaab'. All other languages, including QEQ, have initial glottal stop that does not elide, except after ERGative prefixes. The official Guatemalan orthography, and the PLFM orthography for most languages, does not write word-initial glottal stop. This is orthographically feasible but linguistically inexplicit. In most of the data cited in this version of the MED, word-initial glottal stop is not written. In revisions/updates of this database, initial glottal stop will be written where it is pronounced.

XXXXX

Epigraphic Mayan data.

EpM spellings that relate to established etymologies for nouns, adjectives, and some grammatical words are cited here. They have mostly been elicited from Alfonso Lacadena, supplemented with other sources. The data for nouns and adjectives was originally collected in order to work out the orthographic principles used for selecting the unpronounced vowels that are written after word-final consonants. The EpM othographic data for verbs has not yet been assembled: when this is done, the relevant data will be entered in the appropriate etymologies.

Value of a Mayan Etymological Dictionary for the study of ancient Meso-America.

This preliminary MED provides some of the raw material for understanding the history of the Mayan language family, and the histories of various languages that have influenced or been influenced by Mayans. Through their evidence for this influence, these etymologies will prove useful to many researchers concerned with prehispanic Meso-America. Their most active use is likely to be in epigraphy. Historically, etymological data was often used, implicitly or explicitly, to establish the agreed-upon meanings and/or readings of most widely-attested words and expressions in Mayan hieroglyphic texts. More important, etymological data form a linchpin of almost all current efforts to understand the vocabulary and grammatical forms that are not yet definitively worked out. At epigraphic meetings and workshops, TK is regularly interviewed concerning possible identifications of words whose rough pronunciation is known and whose context is partly understood. The MED will make such information broadly available to all epigraphers.

It is worth pointing out that this material is as useful for what it rules out as for what it suggests. Some ideas that gain currency in epigraphic circles turn out to be inconsistent with what is known about Mayan languages and their histories; recognizing this opens the way to a discovery of the true functions of such forms.

Besides aiding the investigation of individual vocabulary items and grammatical forms in hieroglyphic texts, and thereby aiding textual interpretation, the MED will be useful in the current debate over the identities and historical stages of the languages encoded in Classic Mayan inscriptions. The etymological and epigraphic results in turn contribute both to the culture-historical implications of language interaction, and to an understanding of the chronology and the (archaeologically- or epigraphically-recovered) social contexts of historical developments in lowland Mayan languages.

These inferences at their most reliable follow from evidence of shared innovation: when a set of vocabulary items has undergone a change in pronunciation in the ancestor of a particular group (A) of languages, and that pronunciation is registered in hieroglyphs, this suggests that the text involved is from language group A rather than from one in which that change did not occur (otherwise, that the form was borrowed from A). It also makes it possible to determine the stage of Mayan language history to which the relevant texts pertain, since it shows that the change had already taken place in the ancestral language.

The data on the historical development of Mayan languages is also helpful for culture-historical reconstruction through the methods of "linguistic paleontology". Whenever a word is borrowed from one language into another, this reflects interaction among the speakers of the two languages. By knowing what changes a form has undergone before and after borrowing, scholars can identify who borrowed the word from whom, and the relative time that the borrowing was made. A set of such borrowings can also suggest features of the cultural interaction that led to their adoption.

XXXXX

We have already used this preliminary MED to testing current ideas about Mayan spelling conventions. Most Mayan words, and non-verbs almost without exception, ended in consonants. However, almost all phonetic signs in the Mayan script are syllabograms representing a consonant followed by a vowel. When Mayan scribes phonetically spelled out a consonant that was not followed by a vowel in the language -- a word-final or other syllable-final consonant -- they normally had to spell it with a CV syllabogram whose vowel was not pronounced. Two questions that have engaged recent epigraphic scholarship are: what principle was used to determine the unpronounced vowels in these spellings, and what do these spellings tell us about Epigraphic Mayan forms.

Phonetic decipherment in the 1950s and 1960s, mostly focused on the codices, was based on the synharmonic principle: the evidence to that point suggested that the unpronounced vowel in these spellings was the same as the last vowel that preceded that consonant in the word being spelled. In the 1970s, it had become clear that a fair number of phonetic spellings of syllable-final consonants were not synharmonic; accounts of these "discrepant" spellings were largely framed as departures in which Ci signs often were used to spell apical consonants, or with Ca signs as a "neutral vowel" alternative to synharmonic spelling but with no account for what if anything determined the synharmonic versus neutral vowel option.

Houston, Robertson and Stuart (1998) ["Disharmony in Maya hieroglyphic writing: linguistic change and continuity in the Classic society", in Andre*s Ciudad-Ruiz et al., eds., Anatomi*a de una civilizacio*n: aproximaciones interdisciplinarias a la cultura maya, pp. 275-296. Madrid] conducted the first relatively explicit analysis of a large body of epigraphic data in arriving at a solution to this problem. There well-known proposal is that during most of the Classic period, a disharmonic spelling for a syllable-final consonant indicated that the preceding syllable nucleus was complex: that its vowel was long, or was followed by /h/, /j/, or /7/. Synharmonic spellings could be used without regard to the syllable nucleus.

JJ analyzed the data statistically, and concluded that no such correlation was valid except when the vowel was /a/. Robert Wald made a similar analysis with similar results. We have therefore rejected this proposal. Lacadena and Wichmann have proposed a revision of the HRS model which, for any root vowel, associates a specific disharmonic vowel among /a/, /i/, or /u/ with /7/ and another with vowel length. We have not yet tested this model statistically, but as presented by Lacadena it appears to us to depend upon adopting invalid reconstructions by Wichmann of proto-Mayan forms.

Nonetheless, significant achievements of HRS's work have been (a) to move along the discussion to address a large body of data rather than a small selection of it; (b) to show that, during most of the Classic period, in the vast majority of lexical items whose final consonant is spelled out with a CV syllabogram, the unpronounced vowel is spelled in just one way; and (c) that there was a shift toward synharmonic spelling, sometimes in variation with a disharmonic spelling, toward the end of the Late Classic period.

In JJ's analysis, verbs were eliminated from statistical tests; in the HRS data, the vowel in both the harmonic and disharmonic spellings of verbs were exactly the vowels of the reconstructed suffixes on these verbs (-i on intransitives, and synharmonic vowel on transitive roots). This suggested that the vowels in these spellings were actually pronounced; at a minimum, analysis as unpronounced vowels entails a particular view of Epigraphic Mayan verb morphology that is not definitively established. Analysis has to be conducted first or separately on non-verbs -- mostly, on nouns and adjectives.

Based on his active and passive knowledge of comparative Mayan vocabulary, TK announced in 2002 (at the Maya Meetings in Austin) his own hypothesis about the unpronounced vowel in spellings of nouns and adjectives: the unpronounced vowel is the one (or a one) in a -V:l suffix that was characteristically suffixed to that root in the Epigraphic Mayan language, which should be best reflected in Greater Tzeltalan languages today.

The most direct way to test this hypothesis would be through direct evidence from Epigraphic Mayan itself of spellings both for a root and for a form derived from it or inflected with -V:l suffix. There are ten cases in which both forms are known and for which we also have etymological data. There is one more form for which the etymology can be worked out, but where data is not known from the relevant present-day languages.

One case, <tz'i-b'i> (cf. [2]), is not supported in the EpM data:

In this case, a pM and EpM form *tz'ihb'-a:l is certain; however, the possibility of an as yet unattested EpM form *tz'ihb'-i:l is suggested, though not guaranteed, by Yuk tz'iHb'-il.

The expected -V:l form of this word is, however, also attested:

[2] <7AJ=WRITING-ba> /7aj=tz'ihb'/ `scribe'

<tz'i-ba-li> /tz'ihb'-a:l/ `writing, design'
    MED: pM *tz'ihb', *tz'ihb'-a...
Eight other words show agreement with the hypothesis:
[3] <7a-ku>, <7a-ka> [late?] /7ahk/ `turtle';
    <7a-ku-la>, <7a-ku-lu> [late?] /7ahk-u:1/
    MED: LL+WM *7ahk `turtle'
[4] <7e-ba> /7ehb'/ `ladder, stair, staircase';
     <ye-ba-li> /y-ehb'-a:1/
[5] <7e-bu> /7ehb'/ `ladder, stair, staircase', <ye-bu> /y-ehb'/;
    <ve-bu-li> /vehb'-u:1/
    MED: pM *7ehb'
    Yuk #7eHb'-al `escalera'
[The EpM spelling shows that there was a form /y-ehb'-u:1/ as well as a form /y-ehb'-a:l/, the latter being widely attested in the family.]
[6] <7u-tzi> /7utz/ `good';
     <yu-tzi-li> /y-utz-i:l/ `qoodness'
    MED: pCM *7utz
     also Chl 7utz-il `clear (sky)'
          Yuk #7utz-il `bondad', Itz 7utz-il `goodness'
[7] <ch'o-ko> /ch'ok/ `child, sprout; young, unripe'
     \langle ch'o-ko-le \rangle /ch'ok-(o)l-el/ `youth'
    MED: GLL pM *ch'ok
[8] <hu-na> /hu7n/ `paper';
     <hu-na-la> /hu7n-a:1/ `paper head-band'
    MED: pM *hu7nh => GLL *hu7n
[9] \langle k'u-hu \rangle /k'u:h/ `god, holy thing';
     <k'u-hu-la> /k'u:h-u:l/ `divine, sacred' [Yukatekan]
    MED: pM *k'u:h, GLL *k'uh-ul => pGTz *ch'u:h, *ch'u:h-u:l
[10] <ta-ja> /taj/ `pine';
    <ta-ja-la> /taj-a:1/
    MED: pM *tyaj => GLL *taj
In cases [2] through [10], EpM shows a form of shape <CV-CV2> standing for /CVC/, paired with a <CV-CV2-lV> standing for /CVC-V:1/

where V2 is the same in every pair.

One further example is [11] <7o-ki-bi> /7ok-ib'/ `entrance', <yo-ki-bi> /y-ok-ib'/ `its/his entrance'

<yo-ko-bi-li> /y-ok-b'-il/ `its/his entrance'

This item must be Yukatekan, because it has /k/ where Ch'olan would have /ch/. Greater Tzeltalan has

Chr 7och-ib'-ir `puerta, entrada'

Chl y-och-ib' `entrada'

Yok 7och-ib'-a `entrada, puerta, porto*n de cerco'

Tze 7och-ib'-al, y-och-ib' `entrada'.

However, we have not found (y-)ok-ib'* in any attested Yukatekan language. Mopan, though, has 7ok.ee.b' `entrada de casa/pueblo'.

For most Epigraphic Mayan words, no -V:l form is spelled out. For these words, the hypothesis can only be tested using etymological data.

There are about 125 Epigraphic Mayan nouns and adjectives that are spelled partially or entirely phonetically (crucially, spelling the final consonant) and whose etymologies are accurately understood. While EpM embodies a Ch'olan language in most times and places, a fair amount of the known lexicon in of Yukatekan origin.

When the work on the preliminary MED was nearly complete in August 2003, TK compiled the data from it, looking in all entries with Epigraphic Mayan data for the -V:l suffix or suffixes attested in this file. In most cases, no data on these suffixed forms was included, but where it did exist is was almost always consistent with the hypothesis. TK then searched other data sources for the relevant data, and has found evidence for the cognate sets associated with most of the Epigraphic Mayan spellings at issue. With few exceptions, the Greater Tzeltalan data when present agrees with the Epigraphic Mayan spelling; when no Greater Tzeltalan data is present, the data from other Mayan languages is brought to bear, and it also agrees with few exceptions.

The results were reported on September 6, 2003, at the Crabs and Glyphs meeting (Kaufman and Justeson 2003ms "The Unpronounced Vowels of the Epigraphic Mayan Orthography"). The level of agreement, approximately 90%, easily survives statistical testing. Sometimes the etymological data would be consistent with more than one vowel; that is, sometime there is more than one {-V:1} suffix attested in a single Mayan language, or the vowel of the suffix disagrees across languages. The data were tested for their departure from random expectation, taking account of the fact that, for some lexical items, more than one vowel is attested in the etymological data and could be considered consistent with the unpronounced vowel of the hieroglyphic spelling. TK has worked through the relevant data for attestations outside the Greater Tzeltalan group, which is supportive of the hypothesis insofar as there is relevant comparable data.

If this hypothesis is correct, various observed features of the spelling system are epiphenomenal -- that is, they are side effects of this system. They partly result from the fact that there are different {-V:l} suffixes which have distinct functions in Mayan languages. Some of these functions are carried by synharmonic {-V1l} suffixes; some by {-a:l}, {-i:l}, or (less often) {-u:l}; some by {-e:l}; and none by {-o:l}. From these facts, the following statistical patterns are expected to characterize the system:

- (1) Although the synharmony/disharmony distinction was not a principle of the writing system, what could be described as synharmonic spellings result systematically from the fact that some $\{-VI\}$ suffixes are themselves synharmonic, and randomly from the fact that $\{-a:I\}$ and $\{-i:I\}$ often suffixed to stems containing /a/ or /i/ as well as to other stems.
- (2) <Co> signs are not expected to appear in disharmonic spellings, and <Co> signs should be rare among disharmonic spellings. Both <Co> are expected among synharmonic spellings.

In our view, this leaves little room for entertaining any hypothesis in which the unpronounced vowel of these syllabograms tells us anything about the pronunciation of any part of the word. This does not preclude the possibility that there may be some phonological (or other) principles influencing the vowel that occurred in {-V:1} suffixes. Any other principles influencing the selection of unpronounced vowel must have little scope. There is one good candidate, however, for such a rule: JJ's observation that, in CV7 sequences, the final 7 is always spelled synharmonically. The {-V:1} data tend usually turn out to be synharmonic in these cases, but there are exceptions.

There is a handful of non-verbs with hieroglyphic spellings to which this hypothesis does not apply, because they are not nouns or adjectives. We intend to address these words, plus the verbs, in the future.

The forms from Mayan languages have been cited in a standard order, according to the classification of the Mayan family that I use. Interspersed among the codes for language names are codes for nodes on the Mayan family tree where reconstructions might be cited. Also among the codes for language names are codes for particular dialects of these languages or towns where these languages are spoken. The codes are cited below, in the order that they standardly appear.

In the current database, instead of the codes for dialects/varieties listed below, the following codes have been used. These discrepancies will be rectified in subsequent versions of this work:
